

DINING IN ENGLAND

DINING IN ENGLAND: TOAST X SANDWICH

In England, going to a restaurant and choosing the right meal can be quite tricky. Look at the three pictures and decide for yourself which one is a toast.

A toast is a slice of toasted bread which usually accompanies some main meal, typically part of a breakfast menu or a salad. A sandwich consists of two slices of non-toasted toast bread and is usually filled with vegetables and other ingredients, e.g. eggs, ham, or tuna. A sandwich can be toasted (as in the picture in the middle).

AN ENGLISH DAY

Harry: Hey, William I had this idea...what about eating only English food today? I had a very vivid dream and now I crave everything English!

William: Ok, let's see what we fancy. I guess we'll start with a full English breakfast¹.

Harry: Definitely! But that's really stodgy so let's just have a sandwich² for lunch.

William: Ok, but in the correct English way - in a park sitting on the lawn.

Harry: Agreed! Then we shall have a proper brew and scones³ in a café, right?

William: Yes, absolutely! With jam and butter, yummy! And how about for dinner?

Harry: It's Sunday so there is no need think about it - Sunday roast⁴ it is!

William: That's a deal! And what if we have the munchies even after that?

Harry: Well, we can get a takeaway jacket potato⁵!
